SFP News

If you haven't already heard, this year is SFP's 10th anniversary! We have so many stories and milestones to share that we put together our first annual report which includes a retrospective of all our early milestones and a 10th anniversary video.

We hope you’ll take a moment to look at these anniversary productions because we have taken the opportunity to thank the groups and individuals who helped us make it to this milestone year.

We also hope you’ve noticed our websites, www.sustainablefish.org and fishsource.org have undergone major design and technical overhauls. Our main site's responsive design now displays well on mobile devices. A recent blog describes all of FishSource's new features. As always, our goal is to provide our supporters with the best information available on the sustainability of wild and farmed fish stocks so please let us know what you think of these resources.

Other recent updates include a new set of data from participating companies in the Ocean Disclosure Project. The project encourages transparency in seafood sourcing among companies in Europe and we hope to expand this movement to the United States in the near future.

You'll see all our latest information on our websites and through social media (@FishSource on Twitter and @sustainablefish on Facebook) so we hope you'll follow us there.

Sincerely,
Jim Cannon
CEO of Sustainable Fisheries Partnership
