SFP News

Wrapping up 2017

We're coming to the end of a very busy year at SFP. Much of our team has been in Indonesia this past week running our first fisheries forum there. We were fortunate to have Indonesia's Secretary General for the Ministry of Marine Affairs and Fisheries join us. Rifky Effendi Hardijanto and I toured the exhibition hall at the forum where several fishery improvement projects (FIPs) and aquaculture improvement projects (AIPs) displayed their work. Our goal is to get more improvement efforts started across Indonesia in the years to come and having support from the government is vital to the work there.

If you're interested in how our work in Indonesia fits into the bigger picture of SFP's mission, take a look at our second annual report, which chronicles 2016 and the shift of our focus to supply chain roundtables (SRs). In the coming year, you will hear a lot more about SRs and our newest campaign, Target 75, which we announced earlier this year.

Another important area of focus for us is building greater transparency in seafood through retailers. Walmart has just joined our Ocean Disclosure Project, which has a new website featuring data on seafood sourcing.

If you've been following SFP for a while, we encourage you to support our work. We have established secure online giving through Facebook and you can always reach us by email or social media (see links below).

As always, we welcome your feedback.

Sincerely,

Jim Cannon

CEO of Sustainable Fisheries Partnership
